3. The ruined temple of Adi Nara yana swamy was next visited. To save the image from being handled rudely during the period of Mahamedan rule, the Devotees would appear to have removed and buried it in an adjoining temple. The Amildar said that the merchants and other respectable inhabitants of the town were desirous of building a small temple on the banks of the Arkavati near the Bangalore Gate of the town and reinstating the God therein with Government help. The Amildar was ordered to ascertain to what extent they were willing to contribute and was told that Government
